Kite

for soprano and cello

Text by Ernest Hilbert

I ran my kite till it gulled at the sun,
And from the newfound flight it took Command as much as I, and trained
My arm toward the sky, and strained
The armature of spreaders, spar, and knock.
It threw its silhouette against the sun,
Then bowed blue before a berm of cloud,
And set itself against a greater blue.
It swooped, twisted my wrists, and grew
To be too strong, as nervy as a bird
Of prey, a winged but featherless
Raptor I once held, now spun
Away and unbearable to possess,
A thing apart; though still tethered,
Fatherless, and finally unfathered.

Rehearsal Notes

1. Accidentals do not carry through “measures.”
2. “t.s.” abbreviates “trill swell.” The hairpins of a trill swell indicate an increase and decrease of both volume and frequency of trill.
